Mamdani Administration Advances Plan to Build Nearly 4,000 New Homes at 100 Gold Street

City-owned Lower Manhattan site will become mixed-income housing, including approximately 1,000 permanently affordable, rent-stabilized homes, an older adult center, public open space and community amenities

Project will nearly double the number of permanently affordable homes built in Manhattan Community District 1 over last decade – at no cost to the City

NEW YORK – Today, New York City Mayor Zohran Kwame Mamdani announced the start of the public review process on the redevelopment of 100 Gold Street, taking a major step toward transforming a City-owned site in Lower Manhattan into approximately 4,000 new homes, including around 1,000 permanently affordable, rent-stabilized homes.
The updated plan adds roughly 300 additional homes to previous estimates, reflecting the Mamdani administration's commitment to building housing at the scale that New York City's housing crisis requires.
